WHO WAS THE CLIENT —

The project was created as part of the Founders Factory's Incubator, under the Beauty sector, in partnership with L'Oréal.

WHAT DID I DO —

I led UX from the initial stages up to the million-dollar investment (L'Oréal - figures not yet revealed) in just 6 months.

Reduced the "time to completion" per booking by 30% of the industry average and improved the usability by 60% in 2 months.

- Creative Direction
- Usability Testing
- UX Research
- Brand identity
- Development

CHALLENGE —

The challenge was to find a billion-dollar opportunity that contributed to solving a big problem and helped bring innovation to the beauty industry.

As a Product designer, I began my research with three major activities:

- User interviews
- Personas
- Opportunity Workshops

Beauty sector's problems:

- No access to consumers' data in the salons (trendy hairstyles, color, product preferences etc ...) due to the software currently used and the fragmented market
- No possibility to predict sales in the salons and to identify new market trends based on customer activities
- Product Warehouse management

Salons' problems:

- There are no products covering all phases of salons management: from booking to inventory management and payment
- Personnel Management
- Very old softwares used (not accessible from smartphones or from home)

WHAT IT ACTUALLY DOES —

Aeye is an artificial eye. Using a combination of the microphone and camera on the device, someone is able to ask where an object is and be guided to it. Moving around the room will result in a “hot” or “cold” reading.

- 1) The device is in landscape mode
- 2) The user is close to a table
